ANNANDALE
Botetourt County, VA

SUMMARY DESCRIPTION

The house known as Annandale, a Flemish-bond brick house in the Greek Revival style, has been little altered since its erection in 1835. The house has a deck-on-hip roof, six-over-six windows, and a one-story, three-bay wooden front porch with tapering square columns. The interior, with its plan featuring two back-to-back center-hall-plan rectangles, has Greek Revival detailing, along with four elaborate Colonial Revival mantels. The hexagonal brick outbuilding to the northeast of the main house has ventilation holes in circular motifs and may have been used as a dairy or meathouse. Six noncontributing buildings and one noncontributing structure are also on the property.

ARCHITECTURAL ANALYSIS

Annandale is a two-story brick house, built in Flemish bond, with Greek Revival detailing. The house was built in 1835 with the unusual plan (1) of a front center-hall, single-pile section with an identical but smaller rear section. There is no evidence to suggest that the two sections were built at different times.

The house sits upon a raised basement and has a deck-on-hip metal roof with a railing around the top deck, providing a panoramic view of the valley. The front facade of the house is more elaborately articulated and symmetrical than the other elevations. Paneled wooden lintels featuring a central rectangular panel and corner Greek key motifs decorate the openings of the three-bay front facade.(2) The center bay of the first floor is ornamented by a wooden porch on brick piers featuring a wide center and narrow flanking bays. The porch is Greek Revival in style, with heavy tapering paneled square columns, wide entablature, and railing with square balusters. The porch roof has a wood railing to match that on the roof of the house itself, in an X design with flat panels at the cruxes. Identical doors open to the porch and porch roof deck. Each two-vertical-panel door is topped by a seven-pane transom and flanked by three-pane sidelights. Heavy moldings indicating quarter-pilasters encase the openings, with half-pilasters flanking each door to the height of the transom.

Windows on the entire original section of the house at first- and second-floor levels are six-over-six double-hung wooden sash; those in the basement are three-over-three double-hung wooden sash. The four windows on the front facade have single-panel louvered wooden shutters. A narrow frieze and molded cornice at the eaves encircles the house. An interior chimney is found at each end of the front section of the house; on the back section are two exterior chimneys on the rear (west) elevation.

Also on the west side, a one-story porch was enclosed with brick (Flemish bond) in the 1950s. This section has four six-over-six and two four-over-four wooden double-hung sash, along with single-pane casement windows in the basement. The rear door has nine lights and a three-light transom. Brick steps lead up to the rear door. Centered between the rear chimneys is a second-story frame addition dating from the 1950s, with one six-over-six window.

The front and rear sections of the house each contain a U-configured closed-string stair with paneled enclosure, square balusters, and an elliptical handrail. The newel on the rear stair is a simple tapering circular post, while the handrail of the front stair ends in a spiral on the bottom step. The moldings of the front section of the house are wide and fluted, with bull's-eye corner blocks on the first floor. A wide baseboard is found throughout. The door and window casings in the rear section are in a simpler Greek Revival mode, wide and mitred with no corner blocks. All doors are of pegged construction, most with two vertical panels and brass box-type hardware. The doorway between the front and rear sections has a pair of one-panel doors.

In the southeast room, first floor (front section) is an elaborate plaster cornice with egg-and-dart, acanthus, and spiral motifs. In the center of this room and in the front hall may be found plaster medallions in a radiating design of acanthus leaves, set into a slight circular depression in the ceiling.

Annandale's original mantels have not survived in place. A former occupant of the house believes the mantels were removed by tenants for resale.(3) Those on the first floor were replaced with simple wooden mantels with pilasters on wide bases in a style not inconsistent with the rest of the interior. The second floor contains four Colonial Revival mantels, the two most elaborate in the front section of the house. These have fluted columns, paneled friezes with elliptical central motifs and engaged end scroll brackets, and delicately-carved molded shelves. The two mantels in the second-floor rear section have engaged pilasters (one fluted, the other paneled), paneled friezes, and molded shelves.

Closets next to the chimney breast in the second-floor front section, and in the northeast room on the first floor are original. The latter has a second door in the wall above the lower door. In the dining room are a glass-front cabinet and a small closet flanking the chimney. The kitchen has a cased opening with shelves to the left of the chimney.

The rear door, leading to the enclosed porch, is a six-panel replacement with a Colonial Revival flavor. The rear porch has simple late-nineteenth- or early-twentieth-century moldings, and tongue-and-groove wainscoting.

The entire basement level was renovated in the 1950s with pine paneling and carpeting. It retains its original stair, which is detailed similarly to the one in the first-floor rear section.

Just to the northeast of the main house is a brick outbuilding, a lone survivor of what was once a plantation complex. The outbuilding is hexagonal in plan with a hipped metal roof and a double row of ventilation holes in circular patterns. It is likely to have been used as a dairy or meathouse. Also to the northeast are two small early-twentieth-century wooden sheds, one of board-and-batten construction, the other of flush horizontal boards. Both of these noncontributing buildings have shed roofs.

Four additional noncontributing buildings and one noncontributing structure are located northeast of the main house, all less than fifty years old: a frame barn (built on the site of an earlier barn), two concrete-block garages, an open corrugated-metal equipment shed, and a corncrib.

The main house is the focal point of a long valley, along the James River, which is one-quarter mile away. The entire property, known as Alpine Farms, is a twenty-five-hundred-acre estate used primarily for raising beef cattle, and is made up of pastureland, forest, and meadows. The pastoral and agricultural setting of Annandale remains today much as it has been for two centuries.

ENDNOTES

1. Dr. Pamela Simpson, professor at Washington and Lee University and local architectural historian, commented that she knows of no other house in the area with a plan like Annandale's.
2. It is said that the very similar lintels at nearby Forest Oaks (which date from an early-twentieth-century remodeling) were copied from those at Annandale. (Interview of Elizabeth Alphin Brown by Thomas Spencer, August 15, 1991.)
3. Family legend states that the mantels were taken out by tenants who lived in the house in the 1970s or early 1980s (interview with Mrs. Brown). The mantel in the "living room" (southeast corner) was described as "Italian marble" in the Historic American Buildings Survey Inventory, dating from 1967. The appearance of the other mantels is unknown.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

Since its construction in 1835, Annandale has been the manor house of a large and prosperous agricultural estate spanning Botetourt and Rockbridge counties. The Greek Revival house features an unusual twin single-pile plan, some very fine plasterwork, and substantial interior and exterior woodwork. The house remains in its pristine pastoral setting. A hexagonal brick outbuilding which may have been used as a dairy or meathouse is the lone survivor of the original plantation complex.

HISTORICAL BACKGROUND

The property upon which the house was built, a 340-acre tract known as Sassafras Bottom, was first granted by patent to Benjamin Estill. Estill, one of the first justices of Botetourt County (1770), sold the land in 1769 to William Christian, a major landowner in the area. Christian lived in Cloverdale and ran an inn there, and apparently used the Sassafras Bottom property for agricultural purposes. In 1784 James Mitchnell bought the property, then consisting of 400 acres. Mitchell seems to have made the property his home, as indicated by a phrase used in the journals of Francis Asbury, co-superintendent of the Methodist Church in America, when he visited the area. He described the trip his companions made from, "Liberty, the County town of Bedford," across the Peaks of Otter to the James River at James Mitchell's.(1) It is likely that Mitchell farmed this land, although by 1808 he was apparently a storekeeper in another location.(2)

The property remained in the Mitchell family, passing around 1800 to Edward Mitchell, then before 1811 to Charles Mitchell. All the Mitchells were large landowners in the county. In 1812 James Campbell purchased the property, and by 1830 it was in the hands of William Campbell.

Richard H. Burks bought the property in 1830 for $4722.56 (3) from the executors of William Campbell's estate. The 376-acre parcel lay partially in Rockbridge County, which had been founded in 1778. Burks, who was preceded in moving to Botetourt County by several of his family members, was a farmer and later gentleman justice of the county. Burks's prosperity was such that in 1835 he built the main house that now stands on the property.(4) The two-story brick Greek Revival-style house has an unusual plan consisting of a single-pile center-hall front section and a rear section with an identical plan, although slightly smaller in dimensions.

Burks's fortunes rose in the period 1824-1845, as indicated by his ownership of slaves, which increased from nine in 1824 to thirty-eight in 1845, as well as by the addition of more land parcels to his holdings in the late 1830s. The 1840 census shows that in addition to the three white males (one under fifteen) and two white females living on the Burks property, there were also sixty-four slaves (twenty under ten years old), with twenty people engaged in agriculture. Burks's agricultural output was one of the largest and most valuable in the county, according to the 1850 U.S. Census. Burks's tobacco and wheat crops were especially substantial; the number and value of his livestock were also quite high.(5)

During the period of Richard H. Burks's ownership, the James River and Kanawha Company built the canal along the James River that was to link Buchanan with Richmond and thus to the sea. The so-called Second Division of the canal (Lynchburg to Buchanan) was completed in 1851, with a massive stone lock and dam on Burks's land, approximately one-quarter mile from the house. Burks would certainly have benefitted from the ability to ship agricultural products via the canal after 1851.

When Burks died in 1857, the property passed from his heirs (including his wife, Susan D. Burks) through several owners until in 1875 it was purchased from David Skidmore by Frederick Johnston.(6) Johnston, who had been Clerk of the Circuit Court of Roanoke County from 1838 to 1865 and Clerk of the County Court of Roanoke County from 1846 to 1865, had practiced law and "accomplished a good deal in the way of business profit"(7) by the time he purchased the Burks property. It was Johnston who named the house Annandale, after his ancestral district in Scotland, immortalized along with the Johnston family in the lines from Sir Walter Scott's Fair Maid of Perth,

Within the bounds of Anandale
The gentle Johnstons ride,
They have been there a thousand years,
And a thousand more they'll bide.(8)

Under Johnston's ownership, the farm was operated by his son Charles. The 1880 U.S. Census indicates that the property had a cash value of $15,000; its agricultural output was also proportionally smaller than that of Richard Burks.(9) The end of slavery in the Civil War period made it difficult to maintain such a large estate; in the years following the war, portions of the property were sold. The 1000 acres of improved land and 1355 acres of unimproved land owned by Burks in 1850 had shrunk to 400 tilled acres and 179 acres of woodland and forest by 1880.

In 1887 Johnston returned to Longwood, the house in Salem he had built in 1842. George W. Alphin bought the Annandale property in 1887 from Fanny Johnston, Frederick Johnston's daughter. Alphin's intention was to live in the house, but his wife was unwilling, so his sons George, Jr. and William operated the farm, each living there for a time. Two other brothers, Guy and Richard, also became involved in the farming operation. Finally, a grandson of George Alphin Sr., Dr. Aubrey Alphin Houser, became owner of the property. Dr. Houser, educated at Washington and Lee University and the Medical College of Virginia, acquired several farms in the area from the 1930s to the 1960s to raise beef cattle and practice experimental techniques of raising bulls.(10) Houser lived in Richmond, where he was associated with the Poythress Pharmaceutical Company, whose assets included the 3000-acre farm upon which that Annandale was sited, along with 1000 Aberdeen Angus cattle.(11) He used Annandale as a summer home. It was the scene in 1981 of his one-hundredth birthday party, also attended by the mayor of Richmond, Henry L. Marsh, III. When Dr. Houser was ninety-seven, he married Mrs. Sue Guthrie Davis, an old family friend and former employee.

The current owner, Dr. William Davis, is the late Mrs. Houser's son. Dr. Davis, who has spent his summers in the house since 1942, gained controlling interest in Rockbridge Corporation, the entity that owns Annandale, in the late 1970s.

ENDNOTES

1. Robert Douthat Stoner, A Seed-Bed of the Republic (Kingsport, Tenn.: Kingsport Press, Inc., 1962), pp. 368-9 quotes from The Journal and Letters of Francis Asbury about the co-superintendent's travels and conferences in the area in 1790 and 1794, mentioning several members of the Mitchell family, including Edward Mitchell, whose home near Eagle Rock was the site of a large Methodist conference in May, 1794. The type and size of house James Mitchell built on the Annandale property is unknown; no descriptions or insurance policies survive, nor does the house itself.
2. James Mitchell was listed as a storekeeper in a Grand Jury indictment of March, 1808, for riotously assembling "in battle array with an intention to fight...". Stoner, page 209.
3. Deed Book 18, page 638.
4. Land Tax Books for 1835 show an increase in the value of the land including buildings from $16.33 the year before to $24.32 per acre. The value of the buildings rose that year from $500 to $3500 (a margin note indicates $3000 added for buildings). This indicates not only that the main house dates from the year 1835, but also that some not insubstantial buildings existed previous to the building of the house. Neither an architect nor a builder are listed in any of the deeds pertaining to the house or in the tax records. No fire insurance policies are known.
5. The Census shows Richard H. Burks as having 1000 improved and 1355 unimproved acres, with a cash value of $23,226.00 for the entire farm. His livestock, including 20 horses, 46 cattle, 50 sheep, and 200 swine, was valued at $3000.00. Crops included 2000 bushels of wheat, 3000 of Indian corn, and 8300 pounds of tobacco.

6. Frederick Johnston's history is more fully detailed in History of Roanoke County, Salem, Roanoke City, Virginia and Representative Citizens, ed. by William McCauley (Chicago, IL.: Biographical Publishing Co., 1902) and in Memorials of Old Virginia Clerks, compiled by Frederick Johnston (Lynchburg, VA: J.P. Bell Co., 1888). Johnston purchased the Annandale property along with his children Charles, Fannie R., Julia E., Lucy C., Martha Mary D. and Elizabeth P. Johnston (Deed Book 38, page 364).

Verbal Boundary Description

The boundary of the nominated property is delineated by the polygon whose vertices are marked by the following UTM reference points:
A 17 | 625180 | 4161740, B 17 | 625320 | 4161880, C 17 | 625840 | 4161660, D 17 | 625720 | 4161430.

Boundary Justification

The boundaries were drawn to include the house and contributing outbuilding, along with sufficient acreage to establish the historic relationship of the house to the river, and to exclude the nearby collection of resources that would not have contributed to the significance of the property.
